TUBERCULOSIS IN ANIMALS

By A. C. Page, College of Agriculture, University of Missouri.

Is there really much danger to human beings in drinking milk from tuberculous cows? The agricultural papers of the country have published many articles both pro and con, and the matter is more or less undecided in the minds of many. A man who has a large herd of cows which may have tuberculosis is likely to think there is no danger. It is only natural, seeing that there are two widespread opinions, that he would hold the most practical one. The consumer, however, pays for a pure food product, and he has a right to know the facts. Some have claimed that bovine tuberculosis is not transmissible to the human. This is proved to be untrue. Bovine tuberculosis is transmissible to man, if we are to take the reports of many experiments and records from various parts of the world. Any number of cases may be cited to prove this.

There are a number of characteristics of the tuberculous germs which are giving rise to arguments among the scientists. But the most of them seem to be agreed that the disease is transmissible from man to animal or animal to man. And this is the important point for practical consideration.

It is true that infants seem to be more readily affected by the disease from cows than are adults. One man cited this fact as a reason for opposing the tuberculin tests, for, he said, only occasional infants would be infected with the disease. There is no accounting for opinions. This man was probably a bachelor.

An opinion sometimes met with is that a cow will not transmit the disease unless she has actual lesions in her udder. This opinion has been proved false, as a cow gave off germs in her milk soon after they were injected at her shoulder, she having no sign of the disease previously.

A dairyman told me recently that there was nothing to the tuberculin test. He said that cows were tested once and found to react, and again after six months they showed no sign of the trouble. It is true that in most cases the men who test for the disease are careless, and obtain unreliable and worthless results. The tuberculin test, however, when properly applied, is reliable. Any cow reacting to the test is dangerous. Her milk may carry the germs of tuberculosis to a large number of people, especially infants.

When men all realize the danger of this disease and understand the methods of its control, a great advance will be made in the health of the state and nation.

ALL-SUMMER MILK FLOW

By A. C. Page, College of Agriculture, University of Missouri.

It isn't the nature of a cow to fall off in milk production in summer any more than at other times of the year. In practice, on most farms, they actually do fall off considerably in "fly time." The flies are not the cause of the falling off, as many believe. In fact, they have little to do with it, according to investigations conducted by Professor Eckles at the Missouri Experiment Station several years ago. There are some more important causes, most of which can be remedied.

If the cow had a luxuriant pasture, plenty of shade, and good water all the summer, she probably would produce as well during August as any other month. The fact is, the pastures become short, dry, and tasteless, and she often has slim picking, to make a living. She cannot, as she would like to do, graze only in the cool parts of the morning and evening, but she must hustle over the short grass most of the day in order to fill her big paunch. As a result, she is kept hot and tired from walking about in the hot sun.

It is possible to improve the pastures greatly by proper handling, but there will be some times when the grass will not be so long and fresh as is desirable for the hard-worked milking cow. These times may be tipped over by the use of some green crops which may be fed in the barn or in the shade of trees in the pasture. A small patch of cowpeas and some corn will help out a great deal if cut green, a little each day, and given to the cow. She will appreciate it and will show results in the milk. One should not wait, however, until she actually decreases in milk flow, but should feed a little of this green stuff before the need is very evident.

Where there is a silo on the place, many dairymen practice feeding some silage all summer. This leaves no chance for the milk flow to decrease for lack of easily obtained green feed.

The water the cow drinks makes a difference in the amount of milk she gives, and may affect the healthfulness of it. If there is no place to drink except in some stagnant pool with a green scum on it and a vile smell, the cow will not drink much water. She can live on a good deal less than she usually drinks. As soon as she quits drinking plenty of water her milk supply shrinks. Milk is normally about 87 per cent water, so for a bucket of milk she must drink a good deal of water each day. It pays to have the supply pure, cool and tempting.

The territory of Hawaii would now like to be admitted to statehood. The senate and house of that territory has asked congress to pass an enabling act for constitutional convention.

Just after the war there were prejudices that naturally led young men, raised under Democratic influences, to vote the Democratic ticket. Those prejudices no longer control the younger Missourians. Their every interest will be best conserved now by sustaining the Republican party.

Attorney General Major, stung by a just criticism of his official course in the case of the of the State against the Standard Oil Companies, replied in language familiar to petty politicians incumbent of a dignified office. Every time Major breaks into print he justifies the general opinion that the Democrats made a grievous mistake in nominating him for a big state office.

Anything to hamper Hadley was the dominating idea among Democratic leaders of the legislature, but their crude legislation has not materially bothered him. The dominating idea of the people next year may seriously hamper the Democratic leaders however.
